PROVIDER PERSPECTIVES

Myths vs. reality: Getting into endo as a GP

Drs. Lundon Albrecht & Michael Miyasaki
Lead Instructors, Endo to Resto CE Series presented by COLTENE

Drs. Lundon Albrecht and Michael Miyasaki have been performing root canals for decades and know firsthand the challenges endodontics presents for GPs — especially in today’s fast-paced and tight-margin environment.

That’s why they partnered with COLTENE to develop the Endo to Resto CE Series, a hybrid learning program that’s all about making RCT more accessible for general dentists. Here, Drs. Albrecht and Miyasaki challenge common misconceptions about endo, discuss important technological advances, and share a few of their keys to success.

This article is adapted from full-length webinar and course content.

Myth #1: Root canal therapy is too complex and unpredictable for everyday dentistry.

Reality: With a clear workflow and the right tools, endo becomes highly repeatable.

It’s understandable why many GPs are quick to refer out their endo cases. But a root canal doesn’t have to break the schedule. Most of the perceived hurdles fade away when you divide treatment into manageable steps, implement best practices, and use reliable equipment. Remember: The goal isn’t perfection — it’s predictability.

Myth #2: Accurate diagnosis takes experience.

Reality: With today’s tools, it’s easier than you think.

Percussion testing and cold sprays are fast, effective ways to assess the health of the pulp and surrounding tissues. In some cases, it’s beneficial to confirm an initial diagnosis with radiographs or a cone beam. Above all, listen closely to the patient. They will often tell you exactly where the problem is.

Myth #3: Speed is paramount.

Reality: Focus on organization and efficiency, and faster procedure times will come.

For GPs, one of the biggest barriers to doing more endo isn’t skill but rather a lack of systemization. To remove unnecessary friction, develop a consistent roadmap from access to obturation to restoration. And forget shortcuts. Successful outcomes depend on careful location of canals and thorough shaping and irrigation. Having a dedicated “endo bin” you can easily transfer between operatories is a great way to keep your consumables organized and cut down on delays.

Myth #4: Patients prefer specialists.

Reality: While some cases are best handled by an endodontist, patients typically prefer convenience and continuity of care.

What are patients in pain looking for? Quick relief. Fewer appointments. To see the provider they know and trust. Keeping more endo cases in house can help you strengthen patient relationships, boost production, and differentiate your practice as a one-stop shop.

Myth #5: The endo armamentarium is complicated and expensive.

Reality: Modern tools are all about simplicity and have redefined what’s possible in general practice.

From simple file sequences and powerful ultrasonic activators to motors that guide the clinician (COLTENE offers all of the above and many more high-quality endo products), today’s toolkit enables increased efficiency and more predictable outcomes with less guesswork. And while there’s a capital investment required at the outset, don’t forget RCT can be highly profitable thanks to relatively low consumable costs.
